Ontario residents definitely don't want to see toll fees for major highways, according to new poll findings.

In a Nanos Ontario poll, 59 per cent of respondents were opposed to adding toll fees on major roads that up until now have been free.

About 500 adults were asked if they would support or oppose toll fees to help pay for the highways' construction and maintenance.

Opposition to the tolls cuts across all demographic groups. Males, however, had a higher intensity of opposition than females.

The random phone survey was carried out between March 30 and April 1.
